

The Observer

January 9, 2005

AL-JAZEERA
Hugh Miles

Despite its 50 million viewers, most Westerners had never heard of this influential and controversial TV station until it became the medium of choice for Osama bin Laden's taunts to the world in the wake of 11 September. Miles's analytical history of the station's role in Middle Eastern culture comprehensively debunks the notion that it is a propaganda outlet for terrorists.